OPENING THE BOHOOL GATES.

The reasons which make an earlier opening of the schools gates an imperative need are not exigencies of the passing hour. They are lasting ones and lose no force by being neglected. It is not a case of tiding over a temporary inconvenience which will disappear of itself after awhile.

It is wrong to leave these children, many of them of such tender years, waiting impatiently at the school gates to be ad mitted to shelter and protection. Every day brings the season of inclement weather nearer, and the more severe the weather the greater is the danger to the delicate physiques of the children exposed to cold or rain.

The remedy is simple. Open the gates earlier. The need of this change is remedy the better. Nothing could be clearer than this.

Mr. Bungows had extraordinary skill in the line of robbery, holding up trains and the like professional exploits, and died in his prime, with his hand on a pistol and his boots on his feet. It was Mr. Bunnows's haughty boast that he never robbed the poor. But as he robbed everybody else, and poor men are bad pickings for the ambitious footpad, this claim may be allowed him without exciting unusual admiration for his magnosis.
